NINETEEN HUNDRED AND FORTY-TWO

"Art as a way of thinking and as a human conception has never been a more inspiring, a more helpful, yes a more salutary function in life than it is to-day."

THOMAS MANN

Some people are under the impression that all art activity should be suspended in war-time; that art in its various forms is of only relative importance and that for the time being, artists should turn to more useful occupations. Many Canadian artists would agree in principle with this attitude and would welcome any opportunity to serve their country. Some of them have joined the active forces, others are doing good work in various forms of publicity—posters, illustrations, etc., others are teaching, and many of them are associated with the Canadian Red Cross and other organizations in war service.

We believe that much more could be done by the artists to create confidence and faith in ourselves and our cause if our abilities were utilized.

In the meanwhile, we are going on with our work, endeavouring to keep the arts alive and our societies organized for whatever service they may be called upon to perform.
